Biographical History

‘Student Publications’ includes various outlets where students produced some type of work. These include literary contributions, research, periodicals, the yearbooks and more.

The Student Newspapers began with the Index Normalis, a newspaper created in 1869. However, it only lasted a single term. 10 years later, in 1879, the Young Men’s Debating Club began publication of the Normal News. The Normal News reported on student activities on and off campus, as well as publishing literary contributions. The newspapers created by the Debating Club was subscription-supported, which ensured its success over its predecessor. The students who created the Normal News were able to sponsor this newspaper until 1909. In that same year, control over publication was turned over to the entire student body. Unfortunately, the Normal News didn’t last long after 1909. In 1919 there was a fire (destroyed the Normal School) that halted production, and the newspaper was only able to make a brief reappearance in 1924 until it was fully phased out. Still, the interest of SUNY Cortland students persisted, and they were able to put out a new student newspaper titled CO-NO Press a year later (stands for Cortland Normal). These students wanted to focus less on the literary contributions, and more on the actual news of the school. They were also aware of the downfall of the past two newspapers, and decided that to ensure the lifespan of the CO-NO Press it would be necessary to induce advertisements to fund the paper. The CO-NO Press was regarded highly and consistently won high ratings in state, regional, and national competitions. Although, when Cortland changed from the Cortland Normal School into a State Teachers College, the name CO-NO was no longer appropriate. As a result, in 1942, the final issue released states that their name would change to Hilltop Press (because Old Main was on top of the hill). Eventually that name changed as well, and by the 1960's the paper was known as The Press, dropping hilltop. In 1990, the newspaper finally changed to the Dragon Chronicle which is the current title.

Despite a large amount of Student Publications being centered around newspapers, Cortland student also participated in different forms of media. Literary Magazines appeared briefly starting as early as 1931. The Sketch Book appeared in this year, stating it was the successor of the Literary Supplement. These two magazines contained essays, short stories, and poetry, choosing to focus on the more artistic aspect of the student body. Transition was able to do this as well but about 20 years later in 1953. Transition is still around today, and publishes literary work made by students. Transformations (or Scholar's Day as it was originally titled) is outlet for students to showcase their academic research to the campus community through presentations and posters. This began in 1997 and is ongoing.

College Yearbooks were also an important publication in the life of Cortland students. The first college yearbook appeared in 1926 and was titled Disdascaleion, or Did, for short. Unfortunately, publication was stopped in 2003, most likely due to lack of popularity. The yearbooks include photographs, students, faculty members, campus activities, and more.

Other well-known student publications of SUNY Cortland were the Frosh Bibles. It was student funded and was the size of a small handbook that could be carried around. They were given to incoming freshman as to provide them with a Cortland customs and regulations.

Scope and Content

The records include various formats such as newspapers, microfilm, magazines, handbooks, programs, as well as bound and single items. The student newspaper and college yearbooks are the largest records available within Student Publications.

Related Materials

The Index Normalis, the first newspaper published at Cortland, exists within the debating Societies sub-group within the Greek Societies Record Group.
